What's the Best Binary Options Strategy with Which to Start?

What's the difference between a strategy versus a system? A strategy is a set of rules that identifies a particular opportunity. A system can use a strategy or multiple strategies. But the difference is that a strategy is something one would apply when they feel it's best to apply that strategy. A system doesn't involve any thinking; it simply executes a strategy over and over looking to net out a profit.

Many Traders say they want to trade a system but they end up simply becoming a strategy Trader. In order to trade a system you need the right mindset and you need to believe in that system. You have to have the correct money management position sizing.

With a strategy you can learn that strategy and combine that strategy with other optimization factors so you can look to find the best opportunities on one stock or across several stocks, futures, best pairs to trade with binary options. So therefore with a strategy one would pick and choose the opportunities they felt best.

Consequently strategy Traders tend to be more aggressive in their position sizing versus a system Trader. But that aggressiveness is like a double-edged sword as they say. If you want to be aggressive in your Trading you certainly better put in the work to ensure your trades are of the highest probability. Most Traders don't put in this work and they go ahead and we can see then they get in trouble. But if you're willing to put in the work to find the best of the best opportunities and be patient to trade those best opportunities and only those best opportunities then you could make a lot of money very quickly.
